In this place, in many others, cluster thoughts of the past.

And we gather here, my brothers, that these sacred memories last.

greater than these arise.

Fame smote on the harp of ages, minstrel of heroic deeds, Nowhere on historic pages has a people sowed such seeds.

Veterans summoned here together with the thoughts of "Auld Lang Syne," Anew we recount their victries, added laurels intertwine.

Many a night I watched the Dipper, calmly effulgent o'er the battle-ground.

Till suddenly there came a ripper with a cannonading sound.

Per the bloody field I wandered, death-bed of many a youth sublime;

Shiloh, Manassas, Bull Run, time fails me all to recall. Ne'er has histry deeds spun, nor e'er did greater heroes fall.

We'll recount to the waiting others deeds we hold so sacred, dear.

Strength and welfare I pray may be yours till we meet again.
Ever honored will our gray be, this my farewell, mixed with pain.
